"The principal merit which I claim for myself in this respect,
is that of having noted the whole configuration of the country, and my chief object has been to represent the tribes and nations with whom I came in contact, in their historical and ethnographical relation to the rest of mankind, as well as in their physical relation to that tract of country in which they live. If, in this respect, I have succeeded in placing before the eyes of the public a new and saminated picture, and connected those apparently savage and degraded tribes more intimately with the history of races placed in a higher level of evilitation, I shall be amply recompensed for the toils and dangers I have cone

A GREAT WORK ON THE DOG THE DOG.

DINKS, MAYHEW AND HUTCHINSON, Three of the most practical writers in teaching how to doct how to break, and how to hunt this favorite animal.

how to break, and now to make the control of the co

From the Editor's Preface.

In offering to the American public a new edition of Dinks and Maybew on the Dog, which, I am happy to find, is largely called for, I have been induced to make a further addition, which will.

I think, render this the most person and comprehensive work in existence for the dog funcior and dog-love.

For myself relain no ments since, with the exception of any in existence for the dog-tancer and augments.

For myself I claim no merit, since, with the exception of one or two trivial changes in unimportant recipes in Dinks, and some abridgement of the last admirable work of Cal. Hatchin aon on Dog-Breaking, which is now included in this volume, I have found occasion to make no alterations whatever, and, save have found occasion to make no accessions and a set as few notes, no additions.

The writers are—all the three—good friends to that best of the friends of man, the faithful dog; and I feel some claim to a share in their well-doing, and to the gratifude of the good animal, and of those who love him, in bringing them thus together, in an easy compass, and a form attainable to all who love the sports of the field, and yet love mercy more. FRANK FORESTER.

"We willingly indorse all 'Frank Forester' says in the Preface of this very valuable book, compiled, edited, and fillustrates by him." Spirit of The Times.

"This is the third edition of 'The Sportsman's Vade Mecam by Dinks,' and Mr. Maybew's treatise on the 'Management of Dogs,' with the first edition of Col. Hutchinson's Manual of Dogs,' with the first edition of Col. Hutchinson's Manual of Dogs Breaking, all combined in one handsome volume of nearly Done, with the first edition of Col. Hutchinson's Manual of Dog Breaking, 'all combined in one handsome volume of nearly 700 pages, embeddished by numerous engravings, and carefully indexed for reference. It is the most comprehensive and most useful book on the dog ever presented to the sportsmen of the United States."

"This is a new and enlarged edition of Mr. Herbert's last compilation, Col. Hutchinson's excellent freatise on dog breaking being drawn upon to complete its collection of facts. The work is now the most comprehensive and satisfactory which has been published on this subject."

"This is the most thorough and interesting history of the canine species, and profound prescription for the treatment of this noole animal when sick, that we know of. It is edited by Frank Forester, a compiler of sporting intelligence of great note, and a man of extraordinary talent."
